I'd like to do something like this: The issue is, the ng-readonly attribute is not working, and the text doesn't appear disabled at all. Why is that? Is there a way to workaround this? A: The value of disabled is not reflected in the HTML. The above syntax is technically correct. But as there is nothing to indicate that disabled is set as true, it is not a valid attribute. At the same time, HTML5 does not have a general way of indicating a given element is 1cdb36666d
